I have not had them constantly and had to try others, and I have tried a good variety, but I have never had any to ack so promptly, profitably, and including as Actiones. Within the most graditying results. For children, having used them on my own with such easy and happy effect, I would recommend them to one and to all. These pills do the work—do it promptly, do it well, and leave no lit effects behind. As a bile remover, as a liver corrector, as a foreruner preparing the system for quinine, there is no pill or medicine equal to Dr. O. McLane's Celebrated Liver Fills. I expect to use them as long as I live, it they continue as good as they have been in the past.

A WEST VIRGINIA LYNCHING

Graphically Described by an Eye-witness, Employ Bossley's Courage, Edward Kirks in Philodelphia Press, We found Charleston in great excitenent over accounts of an attempted outrage by a negro at Cannelton, a mining hamlet on the railway, about twenty-five but the whole country was up, and it seemed certain that he would be run to round before many days. He was known to be somewhere within a radius of a hundred miles, and the telegraph had out a cordon round about him through put a cordon round about him through which it was next to impossible for him to break without capture. At last came tidings that he had been taken at Parkersburg and safely lodged in custody of the Marshal of Huntington.

The train with the criminal was considerably behind the schedule time, and it arrived crowded with a mob of miners who had taken forcible possession of it at Cannelton, and were escorting the Sheriff of Fayette county on his way to take the negro from the Huntington authorities. Undoubtedly the Sheriff and his posse of twenty stout men would be able to conduct the prisoner safely to the scene of his crime; but the mob had already convicted and sentenced him.

As we approached Huntington the train conductor came to me and said; "Sir, the mob intend to burn the negro. It must not be allowed, It would disgrace the State. Can't something be done to prevent it?"

"Yes. Warn the Huntington Marshal of their intention. He will refuse to deliver up the prisoner.

"He can't refuse. The law obliges him to deliver the negro to the Fayette sher-iff: and if he should refuse, the mob to deliver the negro to the Fayette sher-iff; and if he spould refuse, the mob would take the man by force. They are all sober, determined men, and armed to the teeth."

the teeth."

"Then this part of West Virginia is just now under mob rule. Your only way is to appeal to the humanity of the leaders."

"I have done that, but they are immovable. But if you, a gentleman from another State, should represent to them the damage it would do us if it went abroad, it might have some influence with them."

A COMPASSIONATE CONDUCTOR The conductor was, he said, a Virginian, and so not directly interested in sustaining the good name of West Virginia; still he would be sorry to have the contemplated barbarity committed, and would be glad if I would do what I could to prevent it. It involved an all-night excursion with a crowd of desperate men, organized to do a capital crime, and I could not see how anything I might say would swerve them from their purpose; but when the conductor sgain arged my going, and offered to accompany mo, I decided to join the law-breaking expedition. So in half an hour I was esated in the car with the leaders of the mob and the ill-fated negro, and on my way to Cannelton.

In the train at starting were four cars and about 200 passengers; but at every station the mob received additions, and before we had arrived at Charleston not only every seat and standing place was The conductor was, he said, a Virginian, before we had arrived at Charleston not only every seat and standing place was occupied, but the roots of the cars were so loaded down with people that there was actual danger of the crowd breaking through and crashing down upon us. And such a crowd! Ragged, filthy, in all sorts of costumes and redolent of whisky, bad tobacco and other vile odors. But the leaders were cool, determined men, and they seemed as intent upon having the life of that one wretched human creature as if he had done each one of them an unpardonable injury. What hope was there of reaching the reason or arousing the better feelings of such men—too callous to all appearance to feel either pity or remorse? The Marshal had seated the conductor and myself in close proximity conductor and myself in close proximity to the negro, who was heavily ironed and surrounded by the Sheriff's officers; and on the seat in front and facing us was the Sheriff of Kanawha county.

This man deserves a few words of description. Though only a little above the medium height, he seemed a Hercules. His chest was deep, his shoulders were very broad, his arms long and muscular, and he had that look of conscious power which usually accompanies great physical strength. A glance was anough to show that he was a man of more than ordinary firmness and resolution. Latter I learned something of his history. His name was Rossler. He had served in the Union Army throughout the war, and entering THE MAN NAMED ROSSLER.

something of his history. His name was Rossler. He had served in the Union Army throughout the war, and entering it as a private had risen to the rank of major. Soon after the war closed, though a Republican, he was elected sheriff in a district strongly Democratic, and this office he had now held for many years, to the great terror of evil-doors.

The conductor explained to him why we were in such questionable company, when he said: "Say nothing to them now. It will do no good till they have taken the man out of the hands of the Fayette Sheriff. They will do that soon. It was all understood before they left Cannelton."

uarding the prisoner gave up their seats on as many of the mob, and the cars rolled wered.

THE MON'S LEADER.

A few minutes later the conductor rose and accosted one of the leaders. He was a man of about 30, somewhat slender of figure, but with broad shoulders and arms strongly developed—evidently by work at an anvil. There were firm, decided lines about, his mouth, but he had not a bad, face, and no one would have taken him for a desperado. Dark trousers, a red fiannel shirt and a low-crowned hat comprised his apparel. He was the ring-leader of the mob. Every one of those 150 had taken an oath, before setting out on the expedition, to obey implicitly "There are a great many ways of catch-willing to do that?" Are you ready to take the responsibility of sending the man—no doubt all unprepared—into the presence of his Maker? I would not give offense. I would only sak you to think before you do what you can not undo."

There was no anger in his look, only a tightning of his lips, as he answered: "For my part in this transaction, sir, I am ready to take the responsibility. But I am only one of 1500, every man of whom has sworn that this wretch shall die. We are miners, sir, at work all day away from home. We are forced to leave our wives and children alone and unprotected. This man violated the home of one of us. If the law dealt with him the most it could do would be to send him to jail for sixty days. We must make an example of him that will strike terror among all of his kind. The safety of our wives and children requires it; so, he must die; and, sir, Governor Matthews, backed by all the military of West Virginia, could not save his life."

At Charleston a man entered the car at its forward door and began to force his way through the crowded alse to where the negro and we were seated. Rossler rose instantly and, turning quickly to me, said: "You'd better got out of the way—you may be hit. It is the brother of the woman, evidently coming to shoot the prisoner."

The words were scarcely out of his prisoner."

The words were scarcely out of his mouth when the ringleader of the mob sprang to his feet, and vaulting over the ntervening seats, threw himself upon the intervening seats, threw himself upon the new-comer and wrenching the revolver from his hand, pinned him to the floor of the car. What followed I could not see, except that soon the two rose to their feet and seated themselves beside each other near the forward door.

All this time the negro had paid no attention to what was passing. He lay with closed eyes, half reclining in his seat, croning a low hymn, and every now and then moaning: "Lord—dear Lord,"

BRAVE ROSSLEE.

BRAVE ROSSLER. The blacksmith ross and pulled the bell rope. Instantly the train slackened its pace and soon it came to a dead stand in the midst of a forest. With the first movement of the leader of the mob Rossler had risen to his feet, and now he stepped into the aisle and stood directly in front of the negro, his hands in the pocket of his sack-coat, but saying nothing.

Boon the leader came toward us and said to Rossler, "Please stand aside, major. We want this man."
"What do you mean to do with him?"

"What do you mean to do with him?"
saked Rossler.

"Hang him to the first tree."

"You ean't do it here. I am Sheriff of this county, and it is my business to see the law respected in it."

"Come, major," said the blacksmith, impatiently. "No nonsense. Stand aside, or we shall have to force you. We are five hundred to one, so stand aside."

"Not if you were five thousand to one," answered Rossler. "I know my duty.
You can't hang this man in this county.
If you attempt it, you will take the consequences." His voice was clear and his manner collected as he said this, but in his great dark eye was a look which plainly said he would be as good as his word.

The blackernith researded Rossler. "The his great dark eye was a look which plainly said he would be as good as his word.

The blacksmith regarded Rossler steadily with a sort of grim smile, but he answered with almost equal coolness. "We all respect you, major. We wouldn't do you harin, but we've promised that man (the brother of the woman) to hang the negro to the first woods outside of Charleston. To keep our word we must do it."

"Then you will do it over my dead body," said Rossler, coolly taking his hand in which was a revolver from his coat pocket; "and I shall sell my life as dearly as I can. The price will be yours and perhaps a half dozen others. So think of it before you attempt to touch the negro. Once over the creek into Fayette I shall not interfere; here I shall as sure as you and I live,"

While this was going on at least a score of the rioters had gathered around their leader, who now, stepping back a few paces, held a hurried consultation with a half-dozen of them. Then he turned again to Rossler, who still stood in front of the negro, the revolver in his hand, and said: "Major Rossler, you're a brave man, and we respect you too much to do you an injury. But there is not another man in Kanawha county that could make us break our word."

"Then you will not murder the man in

"Very well," answered Rossler, "I will take your word for it. I only came along to see you didn't do it here."

THE ACCOMPLISHMENT.

It was after midnight, but fully a thousand people were waiting at the station when the train came to a stop at Cannelton, and as the mob in the cars poured tumultuously out they set up a yell that shook the adjoining buildings and echoed far away like some tumult from the infernal region. Iar away like some tumult from the infer-nal regions. It was terrific but not so ter-rific as the subdued, tiger-like growl that sounded through the crowd when the ne-gro, an armed man on either side of him, stepped upon the platform. Instinctively, he tell back, trembling violently. But this was but for a moment only. He soon straightened himself up, and then strode forward with a firm and measured step to man out of the hands of the Fayette Sheriff. They will do that soon. It was all understood before they left Canneiton. In other words, the Fayette Sheriff and his sham posse had gone on to Hunting ton to receive the prisoner, with the full understanding that he should be taken out of their hands and barbarously murdered by a mob. We soon had evidence of this understanding.

Abreast and by the side of the prisoner were three armed men, and seated opposite or standing near by in the side were the remainder of the Sheriff's posse of twenty. This was the situation when half a dozen of the mob gathered about the prisoner, and one of them said to the Fayette Sheriff.

"Str, we will relieve you from the charge of this man."

"Then the Sheriff answered, as if repeating words previously conned over: "I'This is contrary to law, gentlemen. I must protest against it. I yield only to superior foece."

Then, without another word, the men guarding the prisoner gave up their seats to as many of the mob, and the cars rolled on as before.

guarding the prisoner gave up their seats to as many of the mob, and the ears rolled on as before.

Rossler leaned forward, and placing his hand on my knee, said: "Do you see that, sir? It is disgraceful—that fellow is a poltroon. He has twenty good men, and there are not more than thirty of the mob in this car."

"But his men are in sympathy with the ricters. He could do nothing."

"He could try," my companion answered.

THE MOR'S LEADER.

ring-leader of the mob. Every one of those 150 had taken an oath, before setting out on the expedition, to obey implicitly every direction of this man until the wretched negro was in eternity.

"May we have a word with you?" said the conductor to him.

"You may," answered the man, stepping nearer to where we were seated.

"But I know what you would say, and it is needless. We have decided not to burn the negro."

"And is it necessary he should die?" I saked rising and facing him. "If I understand the case there is no evidence against the negro but the word of a hysterical women, and, if guilty of the attempt, he has committed no erme that the law punishes with death."

Slowly and deliberately looking me discovered in the stomach, nothing affords more relief, while the action on the nervous system is decidedly beneficial. "Trisaw System is decidedly beneficial."
